Spectral decomposition of resonances in extended coupled dimer systems. The dynamic behavior of an extended biomolecular system is characterized by the spectrum of response functions. These response functions are defined by coupling the system to a continuous spectrum of harmonic, position-dependent oscillators. The spectral decomposition of the response functions identifies all the resonances in the spectra. These resonances are directly related to the hybridization of the states associated with the physical system and the perturbing oscillators. The description of resonances requires only the coupled harmonic oscillator dynamics, which is a tool that can be used for the identification of (bio)molecular systems, for which traditionally these have been measured via other methods. The resonances reflect dynamic changes in energy-transfer pathways, which may serve as a control mechanism of the system. The peak-widths of the spectral components can be used to estimate the sensitivity of the system to external perturbations. The methods are illustrated with examples involving a permuted model of the muscle-M2 receptor-nAChR complex, the T4-lysozyme, and the agonist-cyclicAMP-CAM-kinase-G-alpha subunit receptor complex. The methods can also be used to explore how the nature of the oscillators affects the emergence of resonances in an extended system, as well as how this affects the spectral response function., in addition to the fact that the global community will suffer if abortion becomes a multibillion-dollar business. You may feel a little uncomfortable when you see the name Steve Efird, and that's OK. You are experiencing Stockholm syndrome. Yes, Steve Efird has taken us all hostage, and we have a major problem. He's done so by providing us with a "normal" family. Steve Efird has taken a pretty high-profile stand on the abortion issue, and his actions may be considered a bit unusual to you. But the good news is that we have a plan, and we're already well on our way to implementing it. The plan is to expose this guy to as much pro-life activity as possible. Steve Efird is already pro-life, which we need, but he also has a blog and he spends a lot of time on video. This is where we'll make our next attack. Let me explain how it's going to work. As you know, our
